

TransCanada Keystone XL, Company Statement

In keeping with our policy to treat all landowners fairly and in good faith, we have always worked to address landowners' concerns, answer their questions and, if needed, develop the best possible solution. Route adjustments are a common part of that process.

We make every effort to work with landowners to reach an agreement, but occasionally we make the decision to adjust the route in such a way that it involves other landowners. The decision to change the route involving the White's property is such a situation.

In short, we found a better route option with a nearby landowner.

Therefore, Keystone withdrew the eminent domain proceeding when we determined the pipeline route would no longer cross the White's property.
